I've been a huge fan of Salman Khan since I watched "Zinda Dil" on TV when I was in class. I think my first exposure to his work was on Khan's first appearance as an antagonist in "Dilwale Dulhania Le Jayenge" when he tried to molest a married lady, where he was extremely famous for his acting prowess. At that time, he was just a cute, budding child star who nobody was expecting. He surely impressed the audience when he reprised the role for the sequel, where he dished out much more of the romantic charm he usually gives to the ladies. Now, he is known for his versatility. "Andaz Apna Apna" was Salman Khan's 8th film that featured him as an antagonist. He suddenly disappeared in this film as if he had been inspired by the legendary director who had shaped the lives of many of the greats in the cinema. He knows no such kind of limitation. Even when he appeared as an antagonist, he was able to show his skill and love for the ladies. He showed his brilliant performance as a friend in "Karan Arjun". You know I think even "Don" was also an idol because it was the first time I had seen such fantastic agility in his acting. I would like to rewatch this one at some point. There are few of his other movies that I don't know. "Kabil" is one of my favorites. Salman Khan played the lead role as an overweight criminal which I think is so interesting and funny! He was a very fun villain. It was an amazing film to watch. It has the on screen chemistry of Khan-Khan and the makers should have definitely given it more scoops! I think it would have been a better film if it wasn't a comedy. It would have been still entertaining enough! "Om Shanti Om", "Kasam", "Mard", "Dabangg", "Hum Dil De Chuke Sanam", "Dhadkan". These are some of my favorite characters by Salman
